

Resilia Community

Nonprofit spaces. Shared experiences. Expert advice.

Running a nonprofit is a uniquely difficult journey and sometimes you need to connect with someone who's been in your shoes. Find community with peers and experts that can share insights and best practices from experience in Resilia Community.

"The expertise was obvious when being introduced to Resilia. When I posted my question, I quickly got a response with very valuable information from Resilia, but also from another nonprofit. ... It was quality stuff. It was what I was looking for, not just, "we did it, it was hard, good luck."

I've been in nonprofits for so long that I know a lot about a lot, but I still have blindspots. That's what I look to Resilia for—how you can help me identifying, educating, and supporting me on those blind spots."

Momentum for your mission

A screenshot of a discussion thread on the Resilia Community platform. It features three posts, each with a profile picture, name, title, and text. The first post is by Jerome Smith, the second by Ella Coulson, and the third by Reese Jones. The text of the posts discusses budgeting for facility fixes and getting started with templates.

Program Manager, Pups for Progress
Also, as far as the budget, do you think planning for maintenance fees is okay? There are so many facility fixes we made last year, but they're not cheap!

Treasurer, Every Kid Literacy League
Go for it! Anything that keeps your org running should be in the budget
